Building Shooters is not just another book about firearms training; it applies the principles of cutting-edge brain science directly to the challenges facing today's law enforcement officers, police trainers, military and others who require clinical tactical skills in environments that demand expert level decision-making. The first book of its kind, it not only addresses training at an individual level but also considers organizational needs and priorities. Dustin Salomon outlines a groundbreaking approach to training system design that will improve performance, limit organizational liability and reduce the time, cost and resource dependence associated with developing functional tactical skillsets.
