Breathing, In Dust (The Americas Series) Tim Z. Hernandez

Deep within California's golden agricultural heartland lies a rotten core: the fictional farming community of Catela, where the desperate realities of poverty, drug abuse, violence, and bigotry play out in the lives of cucarachas and coyotes, tweakers and strippers, wetbacks and white trash. Seventeen-year-old Tlaloc, namesake of the Aztec god of fertility and destruction, has grown up among the migrant-worker communities that follow the seasons from Wyoming's beet fields to the vineyards and packinghouses of the Central Valley. Bearing witness to a gritty landscape of wrenching contrasts, Loc narrates the bitter desires and crushed hopes of his friends and family: his father's absence and his grandparents' deaths, Zeta's reckless abandon, Arturín's path to prison, Norma's tragic alienation, the farmworkers' final tributes to Cesar Chavez, Talina's choices and compromises. Even so he dares to dream, sensing that somewhere within the cruel beauty that surrounds him may lie his own redemption. Tim Z. Hernandez's land of pain and plenty, his Catela, evokes the essence of the migrant underclass experience. But more, his stories take us there, into the streets and into the groves, into the back rooms of the carnicerías and the panaderías, onto the tracks, onto the thirsty highways, in scenes that unfold with graphic, breathtaking honesty.
