Think Global, Act Local: The Life and Legacy of Patrick Geddes

It's time to look again at the originator of the phrase for our times – 'Think Global, Act Local'

Town planning. Interest-led, open-minded education. Conservation of worthwhile buildings. Community gardens. All are so central to our society that we think we invented them. In fact they were visualised by Sir Patrick Geddes, one of the greatest forward-thinkers of the modern world.

A Victorian Scot, Geddes went out of fashion after his death but in recent years he has become almost a patron saint of the sustainable development movement. His ideas and his practical example continue to inspire the world, in the present and in the future.

This new edition of Think Global, Act Local incorporates much new work on Geddes and examines in particular the question of how this Scot from a fairly humble background, with no university degree, could be welcomed into the Darwin/Huxley circle, could be the confidant of two Viceroy's and twice be offered a knighthood.
